Against What Is Generally Recognized as a Nuisance. Declaring the automobile has made the billiourd a countrywide problem, E. T. Memorial for Heroic Dead.

The prince of Wales has brought back with him from the Antipodes a very beautiful conception of a form of memorial for the soldlers who have falled in the great wer.

He approached Ballarst, the great gold mining city in the Australian colony of Victoria by means of a broad avenue, some lifteen inlies long, lined on either side hy trees, which are flourishing, and that bid ere long to form a wort of foliage domed roof for the entire thoroughfure.

Each tree, planted within the last force or four years, and there are about five thousand of them, commemorates a Ballarut boy who gave life for the empire at the front in France, on the pentusula of Galfipoli and in Palestine. Each of the trees bears the name of the soldier lad whose supreme sacrifice it is designed to recall to his kith and kin at Ballarat-London Mali, Fight Well Worth Waging.

It pays the community to make a battue for tree treasures. It is a fight which should employ many different tactics and arms. First, perhaps, should be the selection for city planting of trees that are most nearly immune to the more dangerous pests. Next is good care, and the fostering of birds which do so much to check insect plagues. Finally comes semping and spraying to get rid of the enemies which, like the oyster shell scale, have broken through the other tines of defense.

A good tree is worth fighting for.
